Creating Your Personal Stress-Management Plan

Below is a 10-point plan to help you manage stress. All of these ideas can lower stress without doing any harm. None are quick fixes, but they will lead you toward a healthy and successful life. The plan is divided into 4 parts.

- Tackling the problem
- Taking care of my body
- Dealing with emotions
- Making the world better

When you read over the plan, you will notice that you can come up with a bunch of ideas for each point. PLEASE do not think you should try them all. This plan is supposed to help you reduce stress, not give you more. Try out some ideas, then stick to one or two ideas for each point.

You might notice that this plan is almost like building a college or work résumé. This is the sane way to build a résumé; you are doing it to manage your life and remain happy and prepared for success, not to cram in activities to impress someone else. It will ensure you are healthy and balanced, and that is very attractive to colleges and employers.

Part 1: Tackling the Problem

Point 1: Identify and Then Address the Problem.

First decide if a problem is a real tiger or just feels like one. If it cannot hurt you, chances are that it can be better handled with clear thinking. This means turning off those thoughts that make you interpret the situation as a disaster.

- A lot of people cope by ignoring problems. This does not make them go away; usually they just get worse.
- People who cope by trying to fix problems tend to be emotionally healthier.
- When it comes to studying or chores, it is best to get the work done first. Because work or studying produces stress, many people put it off and choose to do fun things first. The problem with that is they are not really having fun because they are worrying about the work they are ignoring. And of course, the longer they put it off, the more they worry. The cycle is endless.

Three ideas can help you manage a lot of work:

- Break the work into small pieces. Then do one small piece at a time, rather than look at the whole huge mess. As you finish each piece, the work becomes less overwhelming.
- Make lists of what you need to do. This will help you sleep because your head will not spin with worry about whether you can do everything. At the end of the day, you will have less to worry about as you check off the things you have finished. You will look at the same huge amount of work and realize you can handle it.

- Timelines can help with big projects.

Fights with family members and friends do not go away unless you deal with what upset you in the first place, or unless everyone apologizes and decides to forgive each other.

Point 2: Avoid stress when possible.

Sometimes we know exactly when we are headed for trouble. Avoiding trouble from a distance is easier than dealing with it up close. You know the people who might be a bad influence on you, the places where you are likely to get in trouble, and the things that upset you. Choose not to be around those people, places, and things that mess you up.

Point 3: Let some things go.

It is important to try to fix problems, but sometimes there is nothing you can do to change a problem. For example, you cannot change the weather, so do not waste your energy worrying about it. You cannot change the fact that teachers give tests, so just study instead of complaining about how unfair they are. You cannot change the fact that your parents need to know where you go, so prove that you are responsible and deserve more freedoms. People who waste their energy worrying about things they cannot change do not have enough energy left over to fix the things they can. Also learn when not to take things personally. You feel badly for no reason when you take something personally that really has little to do with you.

Part 2: Taking Care of My Body

Point 4: The Power of Exercise.

Exercise is the most important part of a plan to manage stress. When you are stressed, your body is saying, “Run!” So, do it. Exercise every day to control stress and build a strong, healthy body. You may think you do not have time to exercise when you are most stressed, but that is exactly when you need it the most. If you are stressed about an assignment, but too nervous to sit down and study—exercise! You will be able to think better after you have used up those stress hormones. Some people exercise before school because they can focus and learn better.

Point 5: Active Relaxation.

You can flip the switch from being stressed to relaxed if you know how to fool your body. Because your body can only use the relaxed or emergency nervous system at any one time, you can turn on the relaxed system. You do this by doing the opposite of what your body does when it is stressed. Here are 2 ideas.

- Breathe deeply and slowly. Try the 4–8 breathing technique. Lie on your back and place your hands on your belly with your fingers loose. Deep breaths first fill the belly, then chest, then mouth, the breath expands the belly, and your hands pull gently apart. Take a full breath while counting to 4. Then hold that breath for about twice as long, or an 8 count. Then slowly let it out to the count of 8, or even longer if you can. This will relax your body after a few breaths, but just as importantly, it requires your full concentration. Your mind is too focused on breathing to also focus on worries. Do this 10 times and you will feel much more relaxed. Yoga, martial arts, and meditation also teach great breathing skills. When you get good at this, you can even do this in a chair during a test and nobody will know.

- Put your body in a relaxed position. Your body knows when you are nervous. If you sit down to take a test and your legs are shaking, you are saying, “I want to run!” Remember, you cannot concentrate and run at the same time, so you are making it harder to take the test. Instead, take those deep breaths, lean back, and tell your body there is no emergency. When you are angry, the natural thing to do is stand up and face someone shoulder-to-shoulder and chest-to-chest. You do this without even thinking, but this subconsciously tells the other person that you are angry and ready to fight. It also may prevent you from thinking clearly. Do the opposite of what you would do if you were really going to fight—sit down, take deep slow breaths, and tell your body there is no danger. Then use your brain to get out of the situation.

Point 6: Eat well.

Everyone knows good nutrition makes you healthier. Only some people realize that it also keeps you alert through the day and your mood steady. People who eat mostly junk food have highs and lows in their energy level, which harms their ability to reduce stress. Instead of eating greasy or sugary foods, eat more fruits, vegetables, and whole grains—they keep you focused for a longer time. Go to www.mypyramid.gov to learn more.

Point 7: Sleep well.

Most kids do not get the sleep they need to grow and think clearly. Tired people cannot learn as well and can be impatient and irritable. Here are some ideas to improve your sleep.

- Go to sleep about the same time every night.
- Exercise 4 to 6 hours before bedtime. Your body falls asleep most easily when it has cooled down. If you exercise right before bed, you will be overheated and will not sleep well. A hot shower 1 hour before bedtime also helps your body relax to fall asleep.
- Do not solve your problems in bed. When you think about all the things that bother you, you have trouble falling asleep and wake up in the middle of the night to worry more. Instead, have another spot to think, like a worry chair. Give yourself plenty of time to think things through, make a list if you need to, and then set it aside! Go to bed to sleep.
- Do not watch television, read, or use the phone while in bed.

Part 3: Dealing with Emotions

Point 8: Take instant vacations.

- Sometimes the best way to de-stress is to take your mind away to a more relaxing place.
- Visualize. Have a favorite place where you can imagine yourself relaxing. The place should be beautiful and calm. When you are stressed, sit down, lean back, take deep breaths, close your eyes, and imagine yourself in your calm place.
 - Take time out for yourself. Everyone deserves time for themselves—a bath or something that allows time to think and de-stress. Try a warm bath with your ears just underwater. Listen to yourself take deep, slow breaths. Take your pulse and count as your heart rate goes down.
 - Enjoy hobbies or creative art as an instant vacation.
 - Look at the beauty around you and get pleasure from the small things you may have stopped noticing.
 - Take mini vacations. Sometimes we forget that the park around the corner is a great place to hang out. A walk outside can be a mini vacation if you choose to forget your worries.
 - Reading a good book is an escape from reality. You have to imagine the sights, sounds, and smells—you are somewhere else for a while.

Point 9: Release emotional tension.

Sometimes feelings become so overwhelming that we cram them all away in an imaginary box and think we will deal with them later. But later, there is so much stuff in the box that there is too much to deal with. This can make your head feel as if it is spinning. Sometimes you get angry or frustrated without even knowing why. You just know there is too much stuff going on in your head. It is good to pick just one problem to work on and forget the rest for the moment. When we decide to deal with only one problem at a time, it is much less scary to open the box.

Here are some ideas to release your thoughts or worries one at a time.

- Creativity. People who have a way to express themselves do not need to hold it inside. Creative outlets like art, music, poetry, singing, dance, and rap are powerful ways to let your feelings out.
- Talking. Every young person deserves a responsible adult to talk to and some friends to trust. Hopefully, you can talk to your parents. If you do not want to tell your parents everything, make sure to find an adult who will listen and whom you can ask for advice.
- Journaling. Write it out!
- Prayer. Many young people find prayer or meditation helpful.
- Laughing or crying. Give yourself permission to feel your emotions fully.

Part 4: Helping a little can make your world better . . . and help you feel better.

Point 10: Contribute.

Young people who work to make the world better have a sense of purpose, feel good about themselves, and handle their own problems better. It is important to understand that you really can make a difference in other people's lives. The role of teenagers is to recognize the mistakes adults have made and build a better world.
